10. How do you perceive that education will improve the lives of the children in your village?

“Education equals awareness, awareness equals change and change equals progress” - Unknown

Addressing education at grassroots level is more critical to the long term sustainability of a socio-economic change. The quality of school education in rural areas is much different than urban areas. Children who have never been to any kind of schooling or who give up schooling as their parents do not believe in them going to school, or kids dropping out of school as it fails to create a curriculum that inculcates interest, or the school facilities that are so unkept and filthy that they fall short of creating a constructive ambiance, or resources (teachers) that fail to engage the kids in creating the inquisitiveness, a fuel for awakening the little minds. That is the reason Siri is focusing education at the grass roots level.

No Electricity and toilets, shattered buildings, food is supplied by government through mid-day meal program but there is no place to eat or prepare food (kitchen with palm leaves). The government funds barely support the school. Most of the students are under privileged kids from local and nearby villages. Some kids, who can afford, go to nearest towns to get further education and some drop altogether to work at farm.
